terrain

for design
suitable parts of the site

As part of the project, the project participants are invited together with experts such as farmers and foresters, artisans, gardeners, archaeologists, social pedagogues and psychologists to work individually at different locations (each 1500 m²/project participant) on the approx. 2 hectare site of the Vorderschuhzachgütls (see map "wilderness") along several paths over the duration of the project to plan and implement landscape design and nature-related, archaeological and artistic projects, whereby these are open in the approach and choice of materials. Currently the area consists of a cleared forest with existing natural regeneration and a stream.

The aim is to develop the area into a publicly accessible and sustainable showroom and nature experience space with landscape design means and in a joint examination of nature, surroundings, project participants, history and development possibilities in this natural area at 1000 meters above sea level.
